Jewish Community Foundation President and CEO Marjory Kaplan recently received a “Women Who Mean Business” Award from the San Diego Business Journal. The award has honored women for 16 years who have contributed to business, the government and the community.

Kaplan’s background includes serving as chief professional at JCF since 1994 and helping to grow $207 million in assets from $14 million during her tenure. Kaplan also has helped with the development of the Endowment Leadership Institute.

“Under Marjory’s strong and creative management, the Foundation has become a philanthropic force for change in San Diego and beyond,” said Murray Gallinson, chair of the Foundation’s Board of Directors.
